Portraits & Commissions

I use photographs as references for most of my paintings. The photos that I select have a charged content even though they may be of mediocre photo quality; out of focus, or too dark. In a painting the actual scene can be altered to bring forward the message and the intention. The result can be wonderful.

A family time

As an artist I am interested in exploring life's colors and slices of reality. I look for high emotional content in small scenes so that the viewer will be shown something different about an aspect of the familiar. Real life is not lived in grandeur, but in small emotional vignettes.

We have been so visually stimulated by the media that there is little unfamiliar. We are left with only ourselves to explore. If my images take the viewer into joy, love, sorrow, elation, or any of the abstracts we all contain, then I will be content.

Special times

Julie Ressler creates customized, archival quality paintings using photographs as references. She will use her photographs or yours. Size, composition, background and color palette are adjusted to your individual taste.
